Holy Desire Retreat

I'll be leaving Sunday evening to help with a larger priests' retreat in Jacksonville, Florida today (Sunday). I'll be serving as chaplain alongside Fr. Mark Rutherford, Fr. Paul Erickson, Fr. Dan Kogut, and Fr. Dan Westermann. There will be 45 other priests, deacons, and seminarians who will be making the retreat. I'm excited to have that many priests experience the retreat and also to have time of fellowship with brother priests from Lansing and to meet and serve the others on the retreat. Please pray for all of us, especially the priests on the retreat and the JPPII Healing Center team, as we spend time meditating on desires, that all of us would know the love of the One who creates Holy Desires in each and every one of us. Thanks!

Mass Coverage

I was able to get coverage for all Masses and confession times except Wednesday evening, August 9th. There will be no Mass or confessions that evening. I suspect that Bob Murrell will still be present, so the church will be open for prayer until 7:30. Sorry for the inconvenience of not being able to get that Mass and confession time covered.

Commentary on Matthew

Last weekend in my homily, I read from Erasmo Leiva-Merikakis's excellent three part commentary on Matthew on the parables that dealt with ultimate judgment. The title of his book Fire of Mercy: Heart of the Word. Some people asked for some quotes, so I'm including them here:

[T]he fisherman's deft handling of the dragnet over the waters of a lake communicate in the most forceful terms the parable's teaching concerning the sovereignty of God's irrevocable intervention in human history. Jesus reveals a God whose compassion and patience in no way preclude an ultimate reckoning in which all shall be summoned up from the waters of history, personal and communal, to give an account of themselves.

The splendid thoroughness itself with which God has created all things in wisdom, power, and goodness requires that he eventually look for the fruits of his creativity in his creatures. Otherwise he would be a disinterested or absent-minded Creator; it is his very love that makes him exact so much from us, in whom he has invested so much. The Father, in the most uncompromising way, wants to see his children prosper, and he has given them all the means to do so. Our parable presents a God who intervenes palpably in our world, with all the specific skill of a fisherman going to market and with all the sovereign freedom of a monarch shaping a kingdom for himself.

These are solar truths that the dark side of our human nature would like to see go away. The biblical God is intractable to all our efforts to make him manageable: God is too free, too omnipotent, and too loving to allow himself to be manipulated by our slavishness, our weakness, or our manifold manias. He will not build his Kingdom in accordance with our notions, nor will he judge in keeping with our criteria. Our age seems to have specialized in God-management—the absurd endeavor both to keep functional some respectable notion of “God” and yet at each step to neutralize any divine reality that interferes with the way in which we have constructed the world. The domestication of the Almighty. The relativizing of the Absolute. The taming of the Fire of divinity into a porcelain cup of lukewarm tea. The chief culprits have been certain ideological clerics and professional religious who, knowing from the inside both the terminology and the dynamics of theological systems, have subtly turned the truths of revelation against themselves in the construction of a subtly nuanced yet anodyne “Christianity”, without tears and without passion. Without truth. It is no coincidence that the contemporary novelist Cormac McCarthy, when setting out to portray our modern neutralization of God, should choose a priest to be the vehicle of exploration. The pertinent passage is remarkable in its incisive diagnosis and merits quoting at some length: And the priest? A man of broad principles. Of liberal sentiments. Even a generous man. Something of a philosopher. Yet one might say that his way through the world was so broad it scarcely made a path at all. He carried within himself a great reverence for the world, this priest. He heard the voice of the Deity in the murmur of the wind in the trees. Even the stones were sacred. He was a reasonable man and he believed that there was love in his heart. There was not. Nor does God whisper through the trees. His voice is not to be mistaken. When men hear it they fall to their knees and their souls are riven and they cry out to Him and there is no fear in them but only that wildness of heart that springs from such longing and they cry out to stay his presence for they know at once that while godless men may live well enough in their exile those to whom He has spoken can contemplate no life without Him but only darkness and despair. Trees and stones are no part of it. The priest in the very generosity of his spirit stood in mortal peril and knew it not. He believed in a boundless God without center or circumference. By this very formlessness he'd sought to make God manageable. . . . In his grandness [God] had ceded all terrain . . . and had no say at all. To see God everywhere is to see Him nowhere. (From Cormac McCarthy, The Crossing (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1994), 152-53.)

We do well to contemplate the judgment at the end of time, and seek, by prayer and study, to see with eyes of eternity, that we might be men and women who have eyes to see and ears to hear, and who are ready for judgment whenever judgment might come. Come, Holy Spirit!

Come Encounter Jesus

Next Saturday, August 12, we will have a time of praise, worship, prayer, adoration, and confession from 7:00 to 8:30 p.m. in the church for our bi-monthly Healing Encounter. It's a great opportunity to worship God and to open our hearts to His healing love. Come, and bring others with you. Prayer teams will be available to pray for healing and other requests.

With prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit,

Father Steve

FORMATION COURSES at

COURSE 8 | ON HOPE

In the modern world, many are tempted to despair by the circumstances of life or eke out lives of quiet desolation. How can we retain our hope when everything around us seems to be dragging us down? This short formation course explores: the theological virtue of hope; despair and presumption, the two sins against hope; and how we can hold onto hope in adversity.
